

Oregon Camp Rilea

Facility and Location

Camp Rilea was established in 1927 as an Oregon National Guard summer training area named Camp Clatsop. During WWII it was federalized but reverted back to state control in 1947. Its name was changed to Camp Rilea in 1959 and it is currently used as a training facility for the Oregon Army National Guard, Oregon Air National Guard, regular component military branches, and state and local law enforcement agencies. The Camp Rilea water supply system was constructed in 2011 and went into operation in September 2011 and the municipal service was discontinued at that time. It can be re-established for backup emergency purposes if needed.
